Consolation

We mop our brows and curse the heat
And say some things that are not sweet;
We moan and groan and lift our cry,
And some lay down and want to die;
But, oh, what compensating bliss—
There's still one hotter place than this!

We fuss and fume and do our best
To keep our nerves in wild unrest;
We champ and chew and cuss the weather
And all join in and cuss together,
Until there comes that thought, I wis—
There's still one hotter place than this!

Let heat waves come, they're bound to go
In time the cooling breezes blow;
And when we choke and burn with fire
And in our shirt sleeves still perspire,
One comfort over all don't miss—
There's one place hotter far than this!
